COURSE DESCRIPTION

The Diploma in Labour Law is a one-year program that explains how labour law governs work in India and protects the rights of workers. Indian labour law, whose roots go back to the Independence movement, today covers matters such as conditions of work, industrial relations, wages, social security, welfare and employment, and every organisation must follow it.

Students study the essentials of management, industrial relations and the law, labour welfare legislation and industrial sociology, wages and social security legislation, personnel management and industrial psychology, and communication skills. The program builds a practical understanding of collective agreements and statutory compliance, preparing learners for roles such as HR and personnel executive, labour welfare officer, compliance officer, payroll and statutory compliance executive and industrial relations assistant.
