Course Description

Psychology is the scientific study of the mind and behaviour: how people think, feel, learn and act, both as individuals and within groups and societies. Because it draws on medicine, the social sciences and education, it is often described as a "hub science" that connects many fields.

The Bachelor Program in Arts-Psychology combines the core areas of the discipline (social, developmental, organisational and political psychology, counselling and research methods) with management, communication and human resource subjects. Graduates can go on to further study in psychology or related fields, or apply their understanding of people in roles that involve working closely with others.

Career Paths

HR Executive	Counselling Assistant	Research Assistant
Social Worker	Training & Development Executive	Community Outreach Coordinator

Course Information

The programme builds an understanding of human behaviour across settings: how people develop over the life span, how groups and organisations function, how stress is managed, and how psychological research is designed and analysed using statistical methods. Alongside this, students study principles of management, personnel and industrial psychology, human resource management, ethics and communication.
