Course Description

The Graduate Program in Electrical & Electronics Engineering develops a strong foundation in how electrical energy is generated, controlled and used, and how electronic devices and circuits are designed and integrated into complex systems. The programme covers circuit analysis, electrical machines, power engineering, telecommunication systems and the manufacture and design of electrical devices.

Students also study signal processing, control systems, radio frequency design, digital electronics and microprocessors, combining theory with practical application. Graduates are ready to contribute to power, electronics, telecom and automation industries, where demand for skilled EEE professionals continues to grow.
